

state in archeological contexts. Accordingly, we hope that this overview will bring renewed archeological attention to the prehistoric and historic aboriginal ceramics found in Texas, and that new methods of study—and most importantly new ways of thinking—result in refined understanding of the role of ceramics in Native American lifeways.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Pertulla would like to thank Ann M. Early and Kathryn Reese-Taylor for interesting discussions about Caddoan ceramics. G. Laine Ellis for comments on the draft manuscript, and to Ann for a copy of the South Arkansas ceramic class and pattern MS. He and Lintz would also like to thank A. J. Taylor for supplying the information about the whole Woodland period vessel in the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum collections. Miller would like to thank Tom O'Laughlin for his many insights concerning El Paso Brownware ceramics. Current research on El Paso Brownware ceramics and chronology is funded by the Department of the Army, Directorate of Environment, Fort Bliss, Texas. Figures for West Texas ceramics were drafted by Trace Stuart and Kristi Shaw. Photographs of El Paso Brownware vessels are presented courtesy of the Museum of Indian Arts and Culture, Laboratory of Anthropology, Santa Fe, New Mexico. The photographs of the Minibres bowl from the North Hills site, and the historic ceramics from the Valeta W/C site, are presented courtesy of Baicho & Kaufman Associates, Las Cruces, New Mexico. Prkyrl thanks Milton Bell for drawings and photographs of North Central Texas ceramics and figurines and Lee Johnson for sage counsel, while Ricklis wishes to thank Dee Ann Story, former Director, Texas Archeological Research Laboratory (TARL), for providing access to collections of coastal pottery housed at TARL, as well as for comments on the revision of Rockport ware typology summarized here. Appreciation is also extended to James A. Neely, Department of Anthropology, The University of Texas at Austin, for reviewing and commenting on this typological analysis.
